U/W Video Tips & Tricks with Michael Pitts:

During this small group underwater video workshop Michael will be showing various clips and going through the A-Z of how to shoot a sequence underwater. What applies on the surface equally applies underwater but what takes one hour on the surface - takes four underwater ! Producers and Directors are sometimes unaware of just how long a sequence may take to shoot so I will talk from an experienced perspective.

ABOUT MICHAEL PITTS: Michael Pitts specializes in filming underwater and is regarded as one of Britain's foremost underwater cameramen. However, he is equally happy shooting on the surface or from the air. Amongst his many awards he has received Emmys for cinematography on two BBC landmark series: David Attenborough's 'Private Life of Plants' and 'Blue Planet'.

In 2012 he was responsible for the underwater filming of the Sir David Attenborough 3D series on the Galapagos produced by Sky/Colossus. Formatted for cinema the series was released as a film in selected UK cinemas in 2014. He has recently returned from the Falklands and Ascension Island after filming on the new BBC NHU series 'Atlantic'.

Currently he is working on his own production, which follows the changing seasons and the work of a landscape artist.

Michael has over 20 years experience of making wildlife and science documentaries for the BBC and Independent Companies. He works with a variety of camera systems including the RED Epic, the Arri Alexa and the Arri 435. He is now moving into the world of 3D acquisition.

Besides his filming work he also shoots stills and his work has appeared in numerous publications and books.

This is Michael's 2nd visit as a popular & premier Divescapes speaker, he regaled us with many amusing anecdotes in Edmonton in Divescapes 2012.
